

Should animals be kept in zoos?

Today, I am here to discuss an important question. Should animals be kept in zoos or not?

This is a tricky question with no right or wrong answer. First of all, let me explain what a zoo is.

A zoo is a place where animals are kept in cages.

Some people think that zoos should be closed. They say this for three reasons.

Firstly, many people think it is cruel. The animals want to be free and not kept in a cage.

Secondly, they argue that animals who usually hunt can not do this in a zoo. They are just given food and this makes them lazy and sad.

Thirdly, people think that it is wrong to make animals suffer just to make humans happy.

Other people think that zoos are good for animals. Firstly, many animals are in danger of dying out. We call this becoming extinct. The zoos help keep the animals alive.

Secondly, when people come to zoos, they care more about nature and learn more about animals and nature.

Thirdly, a trip to the zoo is relaxing and can make people happy spending time with their friends and families.

In conclusion, I believe that zoos are a good idea because they make people care more about nature but zoos should be run well so that animals can have a happy life. What do you think?
